Re: Application #09/832,153 of 04/10/2001 by Chang P. Liu, entitled "Automated word processor for Chinese-style languages".

Dear examiner:

With regard to your notice of 05/25/2001, I submit to you the following:

1. The declaration paper which was misplaced by me before in the original submission, and on this declaration I have signed again on a new date.
2. A check of $65.00 for the late filing fee.
3. Article 3 of the system input device is changed from "Chinese indicative characters" to "Chinese language characters as depicted in Figure 2". These characters will be designed in suitable binary codes. This set of Chinese characters is an important part of this invention. These characters provide the means of identification and differentiation of Chinese type words of similar phonetic expressions. Many Chinese words sound the same but that are of different meanings. These characters act to categorize the Chinese-type words.

Finally, since this invention is granted the permission for application in foreign countries, this inventor is translating this U.S. patent application into Chinese language so that this same patent of invention will be applied in the the People's Republic of China and other nations.
